General Information

LOCATION AND CLIMATE

John B. Stetson University is located at DeLand, Volusia County, Florida, about one hundred miles south of Jacksonville, and twenty-four miles from Daytona Beach. It may be reached by the Atlantic Coast Line Railway or the Florida Motor Lines. The site was chosen because it is on high pine land in a rolling country remarkable for its healthfulness, orange groves, native pine woods, and well-kept lands. The climate is delightful. People live out of doors in the sunshine the year around. Students who are unable, because of poor health, to attend college in the North find that they may here pursue their studies regularly and at the same time improve in health. Because of the climate and the high standards of the University many northern families have established homes here.

AIMS AND IDEALS

The University was conceived as an institution where education might be gained under Christian influences and ideals. The motto of the University is "Pro Deo et Veritate"—for God and Truth. The aim is to develop scholarship, culture, and Christian character. Every resource of the University is employed to this end. Stetson is not dogmatic in its instruction but aims to promote learning and creative study. Emphasis is placed upon the development of a liberal culture. Students are encouraged to think for themselves, to develop intellectual curiosity, and to be self-reliant in the search for truth. Their achievement is estimated in terms of their development of the powers of understanding and insight.

ACCREDITIZATION

The University is a fully accredited standard institution of learning. It is a member of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, The Association of American Colleges, The American Council on Education, the Florida Association of Colleges and Universities, and the National Association of Schools of Music. The College of Law is a member of the Association of American Law Schools and is on the approved list of the American Bar Association.

ORGANIZATION

The University is composed of a College of Liberal Arts, a College of Law, a School of Music, and a School of Business. The College of Liberal Arts has the following divisions:

A MESSAGE TO BEGINNING COLLEGE STUDENTS

Every young person entering college faces the question which put simply is "What shall I do or what kind of college course shall I take?" Before this question can be answered, the question as to what he wants to make his vocation or calling and what kind of person he wants to be must be considered. There are many vocations from which he may choose. Some require more preparation and training than others. One should know what the requirements are for success in whatever calling he feels inclined to choose and whether or not he can meet these requirements.

Then, too, one should think of the quality of life he would like to live. Does he merely want a vocation with limited knowledge of other areas of life or does he want to have a broad knowledge of human progress, of the world and world affairs both past and present? Does he merely want to make money and possess things or does he want to have a full, rich life? Does he want to live for himself alone or live so as to be of service to mankind? These are pertinent questions every beginning college student should ask himself and answer in his own soul before he chooses his college course. A rifleman wants something to aim at before he shoots. Aimless shooting is not very effective. Likewise aimless education is not as effective as when one has an objective. If you know what you want to do with your life, it will help you choose the kind of education you will need and that will be most helpful in achieving your objective.

The first question, therefore, that you should face is what kind of person do I want to be, what quality of life do I want to achieve. As one who has been over the road before you and made some mistakes but has given much thought to the question since, may I make some suggestions for what they are worth. If you have a good mind, prepare yourself for a large life, prepare yourself to be not a bird in a gilded cage but a citizen of the world. To do this there are three great areas in which you should develop your knowledge and understanding.

The first of these areas is what has been called the humanities. This is the area of human interests, human affairs, human culture. The gateway to knowledge in this area is the languages, literature, and arts of the peoples of the world. One cannot learn all of the languages of the earth. He ought to learn at least one other than the English language. But the great literature of the world is open to everyone in English translations. Perhaps nothing else so liberates the human mind from provincialism and makes him a world citizen as a knowledge of the great books of the world.

Another important area in which you should have knowledge if you would live a large life is that of society. You should know the history of your own country well and as much of the history of the other peoples of the world as possible. You should know something of the great social problems of mankind, something of humanity's struggle for a better social order, something of the progress which has been made along various lines, and of the problems still unsolved. You should also know about the contribution of great men and women, of social upheavals, of science, education, and religion, to the progress of mankind.

The third important area of knowledge is that of contemporary affairs. One should have some understanding of what is going on in the world in which he lives. Too many people today are like babes in the woods. In the mountains of the southland there used to live people who had never been out of the valleys where they were born. They had never been out physically or mentally. There was an excuse for their provincialism. One may be just as provincial today as far as any knowledge and understanding of contemporary affairs is concerned. Many things of vital importance to us and to all mankind are happening today—political and military events, social and economic events, scientific achievements, important things in the field of literature and art and music and drama and religion. The truly cultured person needs to know something about these matters—not alone for the sake of knowing but in order to think and act intelligently wherever he is placed. So much for the broad training one needs if he would live a large life.

For his chosen vocation he will need to specialize. Many professions require considerable education in the sciences—chemistry, physics, biology, and so forth. Every vocation requires some sort of specialization. One needs this sort of training in order to make a living. The broader training outlined in preceding paragraphs is for living itself.

I hope these suggestions may be of help to you in planning your college career. If you want to know your possibilities and make the most of them, consult freely and frequently with your faculty advisors. They stand ready to help you in any way possible.

THE STETSON ADVISORY AND COUNSELLING SYSTEM

One of the most important phases of Stetson's program and one which every new student should get acquainted with and make early and continued use of is the Advisory System. In order that you may know something about it in advance and avail yourself fully of this service after you arrive on the campus, a brief explanation of its organization and methods of operation is offered herewith.

First, there is a General Council which has charge of the entire program of counselling—educational counselling, vocational counselling, personal counselling, and other forms of counselling. The Council is composed of W. S. Allen, President of the University, H. C. Garwood, Dean of the University, Miss Etter Turner, Dean of Women, and Miss Barbara Rowe, Registrar. Together with the oversight of the counselling program and the direction of its operation, the members of the council also assist in the counselling of students and are always available to students with problems.

In addition to the General Council there are faculty members who have charge of various phases of the counselling program. There is an advisor for those who are interested in the study of music, another for those who want to be public school teachers, another for those who wish to become laboratory technicians or chemists, or radio technicians or nurses or doctors, another for those who want to work in the field of business, another for those who desire to study for the ministry or religious work, and likewise others for every phase of educational and vocational and personal counselling.

There is also a group of faculty members chosen for the specific purpose of meeting freshman students and new students during orientation week and counselling with them as to the over-all program of work which they will engage in as students in the University. This group is especially interested in the new student and in getting him oriented to college life. They are concerned about the total problem of the student as he enters college for the first time. If a student does not know what he wants to do or if he has made a vocational choice but is not sure of himself, a talk with his counsellor and with the General Council should help him to know what to do. It is the business of these counsellors to talk things over with the student and help him get off to a good start in college. Later he will be sent to specific counsellors who will work out his college course in the light of the decisions made in the initial interviews.

The procedure for new students is as follows: first, there will be college freshman tests. The purpose of these tests is to ascertain information which will be helpful to counsellors in advising students and helpful to the student in making decisions as to vocation and general college training. These tests will begin Wednesday morning, September 19 at 9:15. Every beginning college student and transfer students with less than two years of college education will be required to take these tests. They are very important as a part of the counselling program. After completing the tests, students will be sent to their advisors. Those who know definitely what they want to do will be advised as to the courses they should pursue and registered for these courses. Those who are uncertain or have made no definite decision will be referred to the General Council and then sent to other advisors. This program of counselling and registration will continue on Wednesday and Thursday, during which time all of the new students will be taken care of. Friday and Saturday will be given over to the counselling and registration of advanced students who have previously attended Stetson.

The entire orientation program for the week is outlined in this bulletin. You should follow it carefully and ask for information if you are uncertain about anything.
